

Consultation response

I wish to object to the proposed, almost dissolution, changes on BBC News. It is the only news I watch as I believe it is generally factual and unbiased.

I have no desire to watch world news all day. I presume it will be what is currently on late evenings which seems to be mediocre, pointless and as though it's been thrown together to save costs, which it presumably has.

I do not wish to see Nicky Campbell, if I want to listen to that then I will. I could not believe when you disposed of "Victoria Derbyshire" in the mornings in favour for more fluff and personality based programmes on BBC 1. If I wanted that type of program I would have a plethora of other channels to choose from, and three or four presenters to choose from!

BBC news has many very talented correspondents who actually ask questions and make it clear when they aren't answered but without being aggressive about it which is in vogue. They are interested, interesting and informative. I want news, I do not want people trying to be aggressive or contentious for the sake of causing friction and dividing an already divided country, we have politicians for that!

They got rid of "Holby" in favour of creating another soap, the world doesn't need anymore soaps. I get my drama programs elsewhere although BBC have, until recently, created some very entertaining dramas.

I watch the news channel, parliament, daily politics, Dateline, The context, Click and listen to some podcasts. I don't think there is anything else which keeps me with the BBC anymore. We aren't actually all morons that watch tv and we want quality when we do.

If the news channel changes I will probably give up on tv and therefore won't have to pay a tv license. I'm not paying for a service which chooses not to meet my needs.
