

Dear Sir or Madam, I cannot be the only person who bemoans the almost complete lack of classical music on television. Surely, for example, one afternoon a month could show a classical concert. It doesn't have to be in the evening, if that time has to be filled by "popular" programmes. French television has a 24hour programme called Mezzo, which has not only the music, but programmes about music and musicians, jazz as well as classical. If the BBC cannot afford to make its own programmes, perhaps it could buy some of the content of Mezzo. Are there other people who feel as I do?

Yours sincerely, Mrs. Renee Bravo. Member of the Voice of the Listener and Viewer. VLV.
