

We know that access to broadband and digital services has been a big issue for older people over the last twelve months and want to support them to get online in the most affordable and convenient way. We also know that for many, particularly those in vulnerable circumstances, that switching remains unrealistic. We would welcome firms doing more to promote and potentially auto-switch customers to social tariff/basics/essential packages that promise long-term affordability.

Kind regards,

Joel