The BBC in no way represents or reflects life in Scotland. It is a mouthpiece of the Westminster Government and its continual slating of the SNP government here is beyond shocking, as is its sycophancy towards the few Tories here. It is merely a propaganda tool and its coverage of Scottish politics would make Goebbels green with envy.

It does not cover Scottish concerns, indeed, even sports broadcasts are frequently English events. When was the last time the mainstream, prime time slots covered Shinty championships? Or the Mod? Or Celtic Connections? Or our vibrant folk music, traditional dancing, island life and so forth. Why is there very little Scots language on Scottish television? Why are the main accents not Scots? Why does Gaelic get shunted to its own minority channel?

Where are the programmes reflecting our modern life, concerns, education matters, politics? Where are the REAL discussion programmes presenting debates from the wider civic society we have here? Where is the real journalism? The hard news, the investigative journalism? The dramas? The balanced current affairs programmes?

It does not report on serious stories nor does it appear to take the Scottish people particularly seriously. The presenters are an embarrassment in their anti-Scots rhetoric. Just analyse their use of language.

I am not a minority, nor am I young. I am a 57 year old white Scot who is sick to the back teeth of the propaganda arm of the Tory government interfering in my country and frankly, the sooner this poisonous corporation is no more, the better it will be for democracy.
