Question	Your response
Question 1: Because the BBC's proposal involves the introduction of a new public service channel, we do not consider that further analysis is required to determine materiality. If you disagree, please explain why you consider the BBC's published proposals are not material.	Confidential? – N As a PSB, the BBC is indeed right in its beliefs to provide additional content for the audience. However, after several years of public scrutiny, the BBC continue to show repeats ad nauseum and has increasingly relied on "pop-up" channels when such content could fill the schedule in the gaps. In the research included,

	you will find that the BBC’s output is mostly News and Sports. While it can be argued that events such as Euro 2020, Wimbledon and The Olympics are “occasional”. This content has consumed the listing even with the “Red Button Services” delivered by the BBC. The BBC does not know whether it wishes to stream content or host content, and this is evident through its sports coverage. Shows and “Regular Viewing” are moved to the iPlayer whereas the sports are in turn are given complete domination of the schedules. Launching – or in this case, relaunching BBC Three – will create another channel which will see nothing but repeats for the latter half of the channel’s airtime, likely paired with a long shutdown time, which does not represent the real-world actuality and value for money of launching another channel. Especially, with BBC Four now becoming essentially an “archive channel”.
Question 2: Do you consider that the BBC’s published proposals are clear in relation to their scale (both in terms of financial resource and in terms of reach and type of content) and the timescales for implementation? If not, please provide details of the areas where you feel more clarity is required.	Confidential? –N No. Further to the research included. A sample of last week’s viewing schedule will show that News and Sports take up the majority of airtime. Which, having done samples of the BBC schedule of the past, would have only been filled with repeats on a “traditional broadcasting week”. The type of content the BBC wish to broadcast on BBC Three brings to the table two problems. One – The reason why “BBC Three” shows work on “BBC One” is not because of their “demographic” but instead of the nature of programming. Devolution of content is the problem with the BBC. If a BBC Three show is airing on BBC One, then it is a “BBC One” show. Regardless of buffer or pre-title identifier, many shows go on to work on any other channel – as is evident with the originally BBC Three show “Don’t tell the bride” – which has gone on to air on E4 and Sky respectively. The shows do not make the channel, the tone of the channel makes the shows work. Furthermore, as BBC Three was a time-shift channel, the idea of sharing time-shift channels with the under 25’s was a premise that worked for those who didn’t have catchup or PVR functionality. For “appointment television” the whole television landscape (or

	BBC Branding) needs to reflect the commitment to this, and it does not. “You can watch x on iPlayer before airing but not y.” “We aren’t the BBC of the past that relies on repeats but not only have began showing repeats in prime-time slots on BBC One but also in place of the body of work on BBC Four.” “We want elderly license fee payers to have value for money, but here’s BBC Three”. It is this contradictory nature that is confusing the vision and viewership of the BBC. It is about time the BBC pools its content and realises that people will (and have) stop paying their TV licenses, or even stop watching broadcasted content on a whole – with the devolution of syndication and inherent streaming wars – resulting to purchase content directly from the distributor or Britbox (which also nullifies the need for BBC Three).
Question 3: Did the BBC’s consultation process provide a suitable opportunity for you to set out your views fully? If not, please provide details.	Confidential? – N As somebody who is actively involved in monitoring the changing landscape of media broadcasting around the world. The announcement from the BBC came out of nowhere that BBC Three would be making a comeback. I have not had the ability to present my views as a viewer and a license fee payer – especially it the scale and scope I would have provided.
Question 4: Please explain whether you consider Ofcom should undertake a BCA or a Shorter Assessment of the BBC’s proposal.	Confidential? – N OFCOM should realise that this is NOT a feasible, logical, or effective move for the BBC and is damaging in both the short and long term. It would be wise to have this proposal reviewed and amended, with the BBC realising that this does not suit their model, especially with Channel 4 being reviewed under the same scope from the government albeit for different criterion. It will undoubtedly anger further viewers and send them to services provided by larger studios outside of the country who can satisfy more individualistic tastes on a faster turnaround/quality and value scale.
Question 5: Do you agree with the BBC’s assessment in its public interest test about the potential public value and/or market impact of the proposal? Please provide any additional information you may have to explain your view.	Confidential? – N There are three types of people this launch would be targeted at. One. The nostalgic BBC Three viewer, who doesn’t realise that times have changed and channels with repeats of shows aired earlier that night do not contribute

	to a larger variety of programming, but instead, prove that the content would have worked in the same slots on pre-established channels. Two. The new viewers who will realise that BBC Three does not show what it could in the past “such as Fox shows which have now been paywalled by Disney+”. Three. The general viewer who will ask why this is not on iPlayer, the “10:30”pm slot or why is this being produced by the BBC at all at the cost of my license fee. Neither of the outcomes prove beneficial. Additionally, the predecessors for the age range the BBC wish to target with BBC Three (CBBC and CBeebies respectively) all suffer from mass repeats. Once again, this doesn’t build cohesion between existing channels and instead divides them further.
Question 6: Does this proposal highlight any significant market impact concerns which might affect your products and services? Please provide any additional information you may have to explain how you consider the launch of BBC Three television channel could affect you if it goes ahead.	Confidential? – N Britbox, Freesat/Freeview’s future integration, iPlayer’s relevance, and physical releases, still popular with the elderly and 4K/8K early adopters. None of the above provide a strong, definitive marketing point for “BBC Three” and what it, as a channel, can benefit for the BBC brand both nationally and internationally. I hope that OFCOM reviews and finds that this launch is another demonstration of the BBC wasting license fee payers money at a time when people are leaving the license fee and the elderly being pressed for money yet given no content in return.
