Additional comments:

I do not think that the proposed regulations will lead to the results intended. It appears that the onus is on the owner of the equipment to put right any interference problem - that does not stop the interference being created in the first place. There are many sources of interference and they all add together where an individual electrical device may not create much of an interference problem. If a problem arises, the attitude of many owners may well be "I don't understand what the problem is. What I can do when I simply bought readily-available electrical equipment".

Question 1: Do you agree that the Proposed Regulations correctly give effect to the policy proposals referred to, and to the other intentions set out, in this document?:

No
