This is a ridiculous idea, and a disaster waiting to happen. Why not instead make Royal Mail deliver earlier, say before 8am, when people are more likely to be at home. It always amazes me that they can manage to deliver at 8am on a Saturday when every other day of the week it's not till midday or even later. And often not at all on a Monday ...

Question 1:Do you agree that Ofcom should grant approval to Royal Mail for the Delivery to Neighbour service? If not please explain your answer. :

No. I work nights. Occasionally, I have to wake up to take in my own mail, and I understand I have to put up with that if I want to receive a parcel. However, I am absolutely not willing to be woken up to take in other people's mail. Would it be acceptable if Royal Mail suddenly decided it was going to deliver mail only at 2am? That's what it would be like for me. Every day. The very idea of this makes me feel sick, and I'm sure there are many other night workers who feel the same.

Question 2:Are there other consequences following the roll out of the service across the UK that we have not included in our assessment? If so, please explain.:

Yes. I live in a converted house of four flats. I will be opting out of taking in mail for other people, but this means the whole house will be opted out as there is only one letterbox. It's also possible that new people could move in to one of the flats, decide they want to opt in and remove the sticker from the letterbox, meaning I would be woken up even though I have opted out.

Question 3:Do you have any comments on the scope and wording of the proposed Notification and approval:
