

"Absolutely not! This is a ridiculous idea. I have trusted Royal Mail for years to treat my mail with security, but having moved a lot, I know that leaving it with a neighbour is a minefield. What if they go on holiday before you get it? What if their dog eats it? What if they open it, damage it, destroy it? What if they use it? What if its from a bank, solicitor, passport office, driving license office, hospital, police, and many other instances of people looking after something private for someone else without being accountable? My house insurance won't cover other people's property in the event of disaster! Will we all have to take out extra and new insurance?"
