This response to the consultation is from Royal Holloway, University of London. Royal Holloway is a research intensive College of the University of London with a community of some 8000 students and 2000 staff. Internet connectivity for the institution is provided by JANET UK for the academic and business purposes of the College. Use of the College network and the internet is subject to a College code of use as well as the JANET UK acceptable usage policy. The College has rigorous processes in place for dealing with any infringement of the policy.

Royal Holloway agrees with the submissions to the consultation made on behalf of the community by UCISA, SCONUL and JANET UK amongst others and agrees with the concerns and issues raised in these responses. In particular the College has strong concerns in the following areas

- · We believe the Act could inhibit education and research
- · That existing good practice could be damaged by the enforcement of solutions not appropriate for the nature of an organisation
- · That we believe the requirement to collect address information for anyone wishing to access limited services via the Library goes against academic freedom as well as contradict the aims of the digital Britain paper
