

Dear M.Mason,

I've heard your authority contemplates allowing wireless operators to boost signal power from 3G masts up to 4-fold.

I live in France and am electroHyperSensitive (EHS), meaning I suffer from endless pains, with little perspective of relieve since I work in a city where my husband and children also live.

Please, don't allow that. This would mean more suffering for all the EHS living in Great Britain, and set an example that would soon be imitated in other countries. The precautionary principle commands to avoid such steps, and prompt people to a moderate use of wireless devices instead. The world must not turn into a giant microwave oven.

Yours Truly,
