

Question 1: Do you agree with Ofcom's proposal to exempt users of Citizen's Band (CB) radio (and other related applications such as Community Audio Distribution) from the need to possess a Wireless Telegraphy Licence.: NO!! At the moment there is at least some control on it. I can imagine it ending up with confusion where people strap 100W linear amplifiers to their transceivers in the misunderstanding that anything goes.

Question 2: Do you agree with Ofcom's proposals to permit the use of 'Micro' FM transmitters in the UK, and to authorise that use by licence exemption.: NO, I would NOT agree with this!

A previous response has clarified the situation in minute detail (B. Marks). However, having watched sensitive medical drip equipment go defective with low power radio interference it does concern me where a patient is likely to have such a device.

Can the products be abused? I can imagine all sorts of issues being raised when illicit manufacturers provide the ability to "tweak" the output power like in the CB radio days so the product can be used all around the house.

The thought of many micro transmitters onboard an aircraft might also be an issue? Have they been tested in numbers?

In summary I believe the decision to go ahead would be regretted in the long term.
