

Your response

- Question 1 : What are your views on Ofcom's proposed procedures for:

- consideration and investigation of breaches of content standards for television and radio;

- consideration and adjudication of Fairness and Privacy complaints;

- General procedures for investigating breaches of broadcast licences;

- consideration of statutory sanctions in breaches of broadcast licences;

- consideration and investigation of breaches of rules for on-demand programme services; and

- consideration of statutory sanctions arising in the context of on-demand programme services?

One of your monitoring requirements of the BBC is fairness. I have contacted OFCOM and asked what about a bad BBC trait, that of 'bias by omission'. As this clashes with editorial freedom, how will OFCOM receive and process a complaint that pertains to 'bias by omission'. i.e. The complainant perceives that the BBC had the opportunity to broadcast, say news that has two opposing views; and the complainant perceives that the BBC deliberately only showed one view to bias its presentation.

Please provide reasons for your views.: